THE PAR ANDAMAN ISLANDS.

(Providence Journal.)

Notwithstanding the fact that the theory was exploded a hundred years ago, it is still said that the Andamannesse are the descendants of African slaves who, centuries ago, were wrecked upon the Andaman islands. Mr. Man classifies them thus: 1, Negritos, not Papuans, as stated by Figuier. 2. Original inhabitants, whose occupancy detes from prehistoric times. Racial affluity may possibly be found to exist between them and the Semangs of the Philippine islands.

The race is divided linguistically into nine tribes. The entire group is supine tribes. The entire group is supsouls. This supposition is based on the surmise that the tribe with whom the government is best acquainted do not exceed four hundred, though at not exceed four hundred, though at the time—1858—the penal settlement was established at the Andamans they numbered one thousand. It should be stated that nothing is known of the hostile tribe of Jahwas that inhabits Great and Little Andaman, and that consequently this calculation cannot be fully depended upon.

The earliest descriptions of the Andamancese appear in a remarkable col-lection of Arab notes on India and China, which was translated by Gus. Renaudet, and again in our own time by M. Reivand. According to these descriptions the Andamaneese "eat men alive; they are black, with woolly hair, and in their eyes and counte-nances there is something quite frightful; they go naked; they have no boats; if they had they would devour all those who passed near them. Sometimes ships that are wind-bound, and have exhausted their provision of water, then have and apply to the natives touch here and apply to the natives for it. In such cases the crews some times fall into the hands of the latter. and many of them are massacred.' Marco Pelo (1285) says: "The people * are no better than wild beasts. All the men * * have heads like dogs: in fact, in the face they are all like big mastiff dogs." Colonel Cole-brook, toward the close of the last century, described "their limbs as illformed and slender, their abdomens prominent, and, like the Africans, as having woolly heads, thick lips, and flat noses." These descriptions represent fairly well the notions entertained respecting the Andamaneese by most people at the present day. They were evidently written by men who saw them only at a distance. In stature the people are certainly short. The men do not average more than 4 feet 10] inches in height, and the women not more than 4 feet 71 inches. Colonel Cadell, V. C., is reported to have found one man 5 feet 8 inches and another 5 feet 41 inches. Such men, if they ever existed, must have been regarded as giants by their tribesmen. There is nothing remarka-ble about their weight. The men aver-There is nothing remarkaage 98; pounds and the women 93; pounds. Many of the men are well

The people are not cannibals; special inquiries have dence of cannibalism, but there is also the direct testimony of eight out of the nine tribes that it does not exist, and never has existed among them. It is curious, however, that the tribes in

Men and women dance, not together, but in alternate sets. Holding their hands above their heads, palms up-ward and thumbs joined, the men hop around, first on one foot and then on series of jumps. They then turn slow-ly round, walk back to their former position, and there repeat the swinging and jumping performance. Although suffering from a terrible disease they greatly enjoy the fun. I was amused at the cunning of one of the men at one of these dances. Wishing to reward them for their exertions, I threw a piece of sil-ver upon the ground. Instantly the cap and shout, and acted as if nothing unusual was going on around him. With

The bridegroom shows a great deal of modesty, appears most reluctant to wed, but finally rises, and allows himself to be led to his spouse. She also manifests extreme modesty, turns her face in an opposite direction, and, as is the custom among her fairer sisters, begins to cry.

The next day is the time for the reception of the wedding presents, which generally consist of bows and arrows, a cance, pail, and fishing-net.
The bridegroom is ornamented with The Andamaneese spend the honeymoon at home. Husband and wife are, as a rule, faithful to each other. A widow is free to remarry. Those who should know say that immorality is not practiced so much as some people suppose. As a race the Andamaneese are generous and hospitable. The men find the necessaries of life; the household work develves upon the women. The children are kind and dutiful to their parents, and begin to help themselves very early in life. At eight years of age the boys find the means of their own subsistence; at seven the girls do domestic work. The people appear to be very happy. He was given a signed check to fill out the amount of $10, and instructed to pay check for $23,000 and left the city, going to Niagara Falls. He registered at the American Hotel, on the Canadian side, as James Johnson, and pearance, and have large, pendulous abdomens. He was invited to dinner by enterprising mamas, who looked upon him as a great catch for their daughters, while all the girls spoke of him as "the rich young man from New Orleans." About a week after his arrival he was invited to a country dance, which was held in a hotel at Drammondville, but which place is better known as Lundy's Lane, the famous battle-ground of 1812, where General Winfield Scott was seriously wounded. menced by setting up the beer for the crowd, then he bought them champagne and wines, and wound by buying the entire bar; for which he gave the proprietor $3,000. So far these efforts have not been attended with success. The people prefer to peddle turtles, tortoise-shells, pawn leaves, bones, and oysters. The dinner came suddenly to an end, although Grenier urged upon his friends not to "let that bother them any."
The guests went home, however, sadder but wiser, and Grenier, in company with the officers, left "at I o'clock the same evening for Buffalo, where he was lodged in jail and taken back to New Orleans the following day. At the time of his arrest he had but $2,000 left, having spent the remainder. He was tried, found guilty, and sentenced for two years in the penitentiary, but only served three months, getting out by some technicality of the law and by the aid of his parents, who were rich and influential.

Grenier is stopping with some friend in St. Louis for a few days, but is on his way to Chicago, where he is going to visit some relatives. While at the Falls he also gave a young man money to build a roller rink, which was erected, and is now known as Grenier's rink. To all the guides he made presents ranging from $10 to $1,000, and every visitor to the Falls now is told about Grenier and the money that
